Mrs. Roosevelt reduces problems of war to one of everyday behavior

IN A LITTLE BOOKLET, "This Troubled World," which was published this week in New York, according to United Press. It is a thin, little volume, but thin in typographical stature only. It is, in its quality, robust and convincing.

One of the gifts Mrs. Roosevelt possesses is to observe life closely and comment upon it succinctly. To her mind, war is no more than a quarrel between two neighbors, usually headstrong, or bilious, or short on sleep, or long on sensitivity. She cites the modest calamity of one's neighbor's dog damaging the other's flower bed and the appalling furies that can rise from it.

It is, after all, she reasons, a simple problem of human relations, but circumstances magnify it, prides become scratched, the sore festers and grows and presently it's an open wound, hyper-sensitive to each new mood of the weather, or the morning oatmeal or the conduct of the children. It grows into a feud, wives stop speaking to wives, husbands even go so far and land in jail for their foolishness.

Mrs. Roosevelt does not let the problem go at that and she does not content her mind with so simple an equation. Instead, she expands the problem, with due proportion, to the point where it becomes international and then applies the reasons for international feuds and bickerings.

She has her solution, too. It begins with the economic disarmament of great munitions manufacturers who grow rich from wars. They, she says, must be made to contribute to the peace of the world.

FRED CARSTEN IS TEN YEARS OLD

The tenth birthday of Fred Carstensen, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Carstensen, 1452 Post avenue, furnished the incentive for one of the nicest children's parties in some time.

Home movies furnished a delightful afternoon after which the conventional ice-cream and birthday cake was served to Marlene and Doris Lee Quaggin, Nancy Ann Whyte, Lois Severns, Richard Mitchell, Lewis Kelsey, Jackie McQuaid, Billy, Barbara, Irma May and Fred Carstensen.

Ask for these at the Library

The new Cape Cod novel "STORM GIRL," by Joseph C. Lincoln, is one of his best. The delightful romance between a courageous young girl and the captain of a Coast Guard station is set against the picturesque Cape Cod background. Drama and humor are played amidst many salty characters and the setting of sand dunes, light-houses, and old-sea-towns exercises its perennial charm.

THEATRE by Somerset Maugham

This is a brilliant and engaging bit of writing and well named, apart from the fact that its principal characters are actors. It has speed, smoothness and the entertaining quality of a play. "One reads it with complete absorption, surrendering to the skill of a novelist who is absolute master of his technique."

GUNNAR'S DAUGHTER by Sigrid Undset

This saga-like tale belongs with "Kristen Lavransdatter." The scene is Iceland and Norway at the end of the Viking age and the bygone age is recreated for us as completely as it was in Mrs. Undset's earlier medieval romances. Simple in style, it is strong and primitive in the emotions it arouses, and so poetic that the reader often feels he might be listening to a Medieval bard telling of the heroic life of men and women who lived only yesterday.

THE LAURELS ARE CUT DOWN, by Archie Binns

This is a story of vigor and vigorous people. The childhood of the two brothers, George and Alfred, is placed in a lovely, strange and remote part of our Northwestern coast at the turn of the century when it was the last frontier. The boys grow up in a wilderness environment which accustomed them to look realistically upon a limited life and expect to master it. They sail to Alaska in a boat of their own building and continue there their self-sufficient, satisfactory life of the pioneer, which the war cuts short. As soldiers, they go to the Siberian campaign where George is killed by the machine of chance. Alfred is deeply changed before he returns to find both the woman he loves and the land strangely altered, by gigantic forces which are still loose upon the nation. "The laurels are cut down."

MATHEMATICS FOR THE MILLION by Lancelot Hogben: Has been topping the list of best sellers having outsold all fiction and non-fiction in England. The author states in his preface: "I wrote this book in a hospital during an illness and wrote it for my own fun."

Any reader of stimulation for mathematics is here portrayed as a social activity of human beings and is understandable and necessary to human welfare as agriculture. The usual course in high school mathematics is ample preparation for its enjoyment.

Hogben believes more people should understand mathematics which he calls the special language for describing the size and shape and growth of things. Mathematics made human and exciting, for the first time is thus definitely linked with history and daily life.
